

AN ANCIENT EGYPTIAN.

Unwrapping Penpi, a Contemporary of Elijah and Ahab.

About 150 persons, who had been invited to witness the removal of the mummy from its case, assembled in the anatomical lecture room, anxiously awaiting the ceremonies which were to be held over an ancient Egyptian.

In the front of the room upon a long table stood the object toward which all eyes were directed; the case, which was covered with inscriptions and made ready for removal, had been cut into and arranged in such a manner as to facilitate the work that was about to begin. Shortly after 3 o'clock Prof. Tyler arose, and after a few introductory remarks, spoke substantially as follows:

"This mummy was presented to President White and the university by Mr. Pomeroy, Consul-General at Cairo. He procured it at the necropolis in Upper Egypt, about a year ago, but was detained by the ravages of the cholera in Lower Egypt, until fall. At Cairo a French scientist translated the hieroglyphics which are upon the case, from which we learn that this man's name was 'Penpi,' and that he lived in the twenty-third dynasty.

"There are different theories advanced why the Egyptians embalmed the bodies of their dead; one, because it was a sanitary necessity; another, because they could not do without it. But these theories hardly seem to be satisfactory. By the inscriptions on tombs, monuments, and on the mummies themselves, we learn that it was a sacred rite, an expression of their faith and belief in their religion, which at that time was a pure faith; they believed that life was a conflict between good and evil, and that man's destiny would be settled by a final judgment, but evolution was silent, working in the Egyptian faith as well as in the Christian. The Egyptian, though, though downward instead of upward. In consequence of this belief the friends did all they could to make the future of the departed bright and happy and to protect him against the attacks of evil spirits.

"From these figures here on the case we see that the friends of 'Penpi' were anxious to secure repose for his soul; here on his head is the sacred beetle, around his neck is the representation of a necklace, on his breast is the figure of a vulture holding two seals in his claws—an emblem of eternity—below is a sparrowhawk, also holding a seal. From the inscription we learn that 'Penpi' belonged to the twenty-third dynasty. Eight hundred years B. C. kind friends laid away this body, which, to all appearances, has remained unharmed for nearly 3,000 years. We can hardly comprehend that this man lived before the first Olympiad, nearly fifty years before the legendary founding of Rome, was a contemporary with the founding of Carthage; lived 250 years before Cyrus, 300 years before Confucius, 750 years before Julius Caesar invaded Britain, 400 years after the Trojan war, 100 years after Homer, 222 years before Solon, 200 years before the battle of Marathon, or in Jewish chronology, 500 years after the exodus, 175 years after Solomon, and was a contemporary of Elijah, Elisha, and Ahab.

Prof. Tyler then introduced Prof. Gage, who gave a brief account of the method pursued by the Egyptians in embalming the bodies of the dead. He said: "The process of embalming is very simple and is not, as is generally supposed, a lost art. After death the remains were taken to the lower order of priests, who removed the soft parts of the body, which was then placed in a sort of brine and soaked for twenty days; it was then removed, and resin, cinnamon, myrrh, &c., were applied, this was followed by a thorough drying. Sometimes the face was gilded, but only by the most wealthy. The cost of embalming a body in this way was from $1,000 to $2,000; after the drying process the body was wrapped, often 1,000 yards of bandage being used.

"The case about this mummy is evidently made of the same material as the cloth wrappings but soaked in some gum."

After the speaking the mummy was taken from the case and the unwrapping commenced. The bandages, which were of a yellowish color, about ten feet long and four inches wide, were made of linen and fringed at the ends; they were put on very symmetrically, one layer being crossed, the next up and down.

The head only was uncovered in the presence of the audience, and it was found to be in a good state of preservation; the hair had been shaven closely, but on the back of the head a little could be seen, which was of a sandy color; the beard also could be recognized. The face was of medium size, with a low forehead, a Roman nose, and rather high cheek bones—altogether a good-looking face, taking his age into consideration.

As the unwrapping was going on a gain of wheat, as well as grapes, was found, which was placed in bottle and passed around at all might see.

Those present were asked to look at the mummy as they passed out, an opportunity of which nearly all availed themselves. After this the bandages were taken from the whole body. Between the legs parts of the viscera, which had been taken from the body, were found carefully wrapped in linen cloth. The body was hard and of dark brown color, five feet and five inches in height, and the nails of the fingers and toes were as perfect as when the body was placed in its narrow limits. A number of small beetles had been bored their way through the case were found among the bandages.

A French husband.

A Frenchman recently died who, it is narrated on his wedding day some twenty years ago, took the original—perhaps it may be said rather imprudent—resolution to keep a yearly account of kisses exchanged with his wife. This habit became so fixed upon him that he never forgot it. He was destined to be the first to go, but when on his sick bed, foreseeing that he would not recover, he begged a friend to let the world know the result of his twenty years' account. Keeping during the first year of wedded life the kisses exchanged reached the colossal figure of 36,500, or 100 a day on an average; but in the following twelve months there was a notable decrease, not more than 10,000 being, inscribed on his register, while the third year shows a still greater falling off, the average number of kisses being about ten a day. And after the lapse of five years a further reduction is recorded, and the account-keeper's tale is simplified, for only two kisses were exchanged during each twenty-four hours—"one on rising, one on retiring to rest."

Later on, during the last ten years of his married life, they "kissed" each other only once a day, and on the last day of his life, he had only one kiss in making up his annual domestic statistics.—London Standard.

The tallest girls are considered the most beautiful of the fashioning. During places this opinion. A Newport man put his daughter back and down on a pole supporting a martin box the other evening, and twenty-seven near-eyed dudes pined at his garden while bowing and currying their heads, and would they have their brothers every time they needed.

"This ring, which I would ask you to accept of me, is emblematic of my love for you; it has no value, thank you much, but it is a curious specimen of my love for you; it has no beginning."

The houses built in London in 1883 would cover a street for a distance of over seventy-five miles.

Charity of Speech.

It shows a noble heart to speak kindly of the erring. Charity of speech is as divine a thing as almsgiving or the charity of action. The tongue that speaketh no evil is as lovely and as much to be admired as the hand that administers suffering humanity. To judge no one harshly; to misconstrue no man's motives; to believe things are what they seem to be until the contrary is proven; to temper judgment with mercy; to be equally as prize-worthy to build churches, establish asylums and found colleges.

Unkind words do as much harm and destroy as much happiness as unkind deeds. Many a heart has been pained and wounded beyond the reach of the cure effected by the healing balm of time; many a reputation has been stabbed to death by the blight and sting of a look or a word. They have destroyed the peace of families, parted husbands and wives, and broken the sacred ties of friendship between the dearest and the most intimate friends. There is a charity which thinketh no evil and which speaketh no evil, and which withholdeth words in suppressing harsh expressions, in abstaining from speech, when to speak is to censure and condemn. Such charity hears the tale of slander under a protest and repeats it not again; it refuses to be one to help the ball of calumny and detraction roll on, and will not be accessory to the cruel and relentless butchery of character and reputation.

While the busy, tattling and censorious world is plotting mischief and indulging in whispers and insinuations intended to wound the heart and mar the character, charity sits dumb amid the clatter of words and the shots of the sharp tongue, refraining from passing judgment on that about which it knows nothing and has no proof of any charges of wrong or unfair dealing, and which, even if it had, would prefer throwing the mantle of charity or the cloak of silence over the offender and his evil propensities. Charity listens in silence but refrains from unfavorable comment, and locks the unpleasant secret up in the inner chamber of the heart.

It would be impossible for slander and detraction to prevail as widely as they do, if reticence instead of promulgation were observed as the universal and invariable rule. Could report, especially unfavorable report, be furnished with the swift feet and hundred wings it has if there were no man willing to catch and bear, and busy tongues to tell, the dark and damning tale of calumny and detraction. It is speech, deep dark and vindictive, that keeps the fire alive and sends it to the flames of evil. It is the tender wings of innocence and love, that is to the heart that is kind and gentle that charity flies and takes possession and broods gently and quietly over it with the tender care and mild beneficence of the dove. There it takes up its abode and makes its home, and by the words withheld and the kindly words out-spoken, we have seen that the dove of peace was nesting in the heart. The boom that is filled with bitterness it looks through a clouded and selfish vision.—Columbia Freeman.

Why She Came to Little Rock.

Recently passers-by noticed a woman standing on the corner of Main and Fourth streets. She wore an elegant bonnet and her dress indicated adversity. A gentleman, moved by the spirit of charity, approached her and asked:

"Are you alone?"

"Yes."

"Are you distressed?"

"Yes."

"Have you applied to the authorities?"

"Yes."

"Won't they help you?"

"The chief of police says he will do all he can to assist me, but he says I must have a family."

"Yes."

"Where?"

"Texas."

"How long have you been in Little Rock?"

"Not here this afternoon."

"What is the nature of your distress?"

"Why a confounded fellow down in Texas fooled my daughter, stole my mule and came to this town. I don't mind his fooling 'Riala so much, but the thought that he's got that mule goes through me like a darning needle."

"The man let a nickel fall back into his pocket and stroled away."

A Case in Point.

Young Johnny Jarpley was inclined to be a good boy, and his mother spent much time in instructing him in the enormity of the sin of telling falsehoods, and to impress it upon him, wound up by telling him that people who told lies choked to death. When the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Muckle were taking dinner at the Jarpleys on a return call, the next day, Mrs. Jarpley asked her guest, "So, Mrs. Muckle, you like my cooking?"

"It is splendid, Mrs. Jarpley, just splendid," enthusiastically responded Mrs. Muckle. "My dear Mrs. Jarpley, it is fortunate in the possession of such an excellent cook as yourself."

Just as the lady concluded she took a sip of water, and a few drops "going the wrong way," caused her to cough.

"There she goes! There she goes, mother!" exclaimed young Jarpley in great excitement. "I heard her say, when you was out of the parlor to Mr. Muckle, she wished it was over, as one of your couple was enough to kill a mule and she wondered how your husband had ever lived so long."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

"He began life young" remarked a writer, speaking of an individual who had risen to eminence. That's the way with most of us. We begin life young. If we could begin life old, we might be able to avoid the pain of teething, the danger of measles, and other ills to which infant flesh is heir. But it seems to be necessary that we should begin life young. Somehow, there is no getting over it.—Somerville Journal.

A Cincinnati barber affirms that poor people rarely get bald, but the wealthy classes get bald sooner, the "professional and business men, lawyers, preachers, bankers, editors and reporters," said the barber.

A case is on trial in one of the courts of New York City, in which Alexander Boyd sues Catharine, his wife, to compel her to carry out the alleged terms of their marriage contract. He says that by this contract, made on May 6, 1879, she agreed to settle on him one-half of her third interest in the estate of her deceased husband, James McArthur. He agreed to marry her in return, and on May 15 following he did marry her. Now, he says, she won't give him the property. Mrs. Boyd claims to have signed the contract, if at all, while under the influence of liquor, but Boyd brings witnesses to prove that she was sober. The amount involved is about $2,500.

In Armenia girls are married when 12 years old. In this country at that age they are too busy buying candy and making faces at the boys to think of matrimony.

THE MINISTER WHO FAILS

to interest his congregation and build up his church is generally accused of being a poor preacher, or of not studying hard enough. That is not always where the trouble comes from. Dyspepsia and liver disorders are responsible for many a dull sermon and many a vacant pulpit. When the Dominie's digestive apparatus is working wrong and his nerves are giving him pain, and his brain refuses to do its duty, it is almost impossible to make or to preach a good sermon. Give your suffering minister a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. You will see its effect on next Sunday's preaching. The Rev. Mr. Zehring, of Codorus, Pa., was paralyzed, and could not walk except with crutches, until Brown's Iron Bitters made a new man of him. The Rev. Mr. White, of Rock Hill, S. C., says: "It restored me to strength and vigor." Brown's Iron Bitters is not only for the minister, but for all people.
